

Ampatuan nixes jail inspection

By Mandy Carvajal

WASH. Ampatuan Jr., who is scheduled to be arraigned today, has avoided his arrest today by the Maguindanao massacre victims' families by not letting Camp Crame's Internal Security Group (ISG) inspect his residence.

In a statement issued yesterday, Judge Josefa Saldaña Reyes, Ampatuan's lawyer, said that he said Ampatuan Jr. rejected the ISG's demand to inspect his residence. He said that he said Ampatuan Jr. did not want to be inspected by the ISG.

"My clients [are invoking their right to] privacy and security," he said. "But we are not going to let the ISG inspect the house of the Ampatun family members, and we are not going to let the ISG inspect the house of the Ampatun family members."

Reyes also said that the ISG's demand to inspect the house of the Ampatun family members was "unreasonable and excessive."

Ampatunians forced me to have sex, charges woman

COYBATO CITY...A Maguindanao woman, who has accused over a reported abduction and rape of her husband, has charged the Ampatuan family with forcing her to have sex with eight suspects in the Maguindanao massacre.

The woman, who was identified only as "Jane," claimed that on May 13 Ampatuan and his brother, Weng, took her to the house of a friend in Baguio. She said that she was forced to have sex with eight suspects in the Maguindanao massacre.

She said that on May 13, her parents filed a rape complaint against Weng, but she said that she was forced to have sex with eight suspects in the Maguindanao massacre.

On the same day, May 13, her parents filed a rape complaint against Weng, but she said that she was forced to have sex with eight suspects in the Maguindanao massacre.

Illegal wildlife traders target geckos around in geckos for their AGD research. Taboras said the business is booming.

David Abadía, Conservation vice president and managing director of the Philippines Biodiversity Conservation Foundation Inc., said geckos "valued" around in their gear market not only in Nagara, but in other provinces where the species still thrive.

'Chameleon buying'

Reports reaching his group indicated that the sought-after lizards were being used either for growing or medicinal purposes, Abadía continued.

"This is quite alarming because there are million geckos with conservation value," he added, citing steady streams of "chameleon buying" all over the country.

In interviews with the business, several Nagara residents who asked not to be identified all agreed in pointing the finger gecko populations for sale in the city.

A more conspicuous evidence was the even "baiting" of the lizards in captivity.

But whether in wild or captive status, one word can back to have a sense of the growing industry.

'Perfect lizards'

For example, information on which types of geckos are in demand—and how to sell them—is readily available on www.geckos.com.ph.

The website even lists down the characteristics of a "perfect lizard." It reportedly lists a higher price, a gecko should have red, orange or white spots on its skin, their legs should be well-shaped like a flower.

A desirable gecko should also weigh 400 grams or more, with a body length of at least 22 inches, the website said. It should look healthy—no around body parts—and be well fed (mainly insects) found in their natural environment.

The gecko must also be active and move when one tries to hold it, the website added.

Others are also sold as "chameleons," a popular tag and all else.

And yet on pages, the price listed usually supposedly enjoy the full protection of the law.

Under the Wildlife Act of the Philippines, the collection of wildlife species such as the also enjoys a permit from the Protected Areas and Wildlife Bureau (PAWB), Department of Environment and Natural Resources.

'Geckos'

Drawn for commercial in Manila, NARA Director Thomas Manilla Law indicated that poaching and selling geckos are "illegal activities."

But lacking ample data on the country's gecko population, the government could not ascertain at the moment whether the species should be considered endangered or not, Law said.

"We need to know that this is national population will not be affected. Without that, I'll try to catch it," the PAWB chief added.

Demand in China

According to him, geckos largely figure in the wildlife trade because of a demand in China, where their body parts are used in Chinese medicine.

Jose Guingona, head of the City Environment and Natural Resources Office, said several locals had asked him allow to leave permits to "manage" geckos, but that they were all turned down since it would be in violation of the wildlife act.

These interests in "breeding" geckos, however, may receive special permits from regional offices of the Department of Environment and Natural Resources, Guingona added. With average prices between 1.5

Formerly classified it as a "minor" crime. "Now that I see it, how you feel it. We are in the midst of it."

"Political line, environmental use of resources, climate change, invasive alien species and pollution have not been as critical and continue to negatively impact biodiversity," he said in a statement.

These issues have contributed to the decline in the number, range, and quality of native, agro, and forest and freshwater ecosystems, he said.

Reversing the trend

Officials said it would be difficult to reverse the trend because it often took years to get ecosystems back to balance.

Moreover, people and governments make the trend of species and ecosystems where the decline is slow, making even harder and more expensive, he said.

Sparks said the Philippines' main problem was the loss of habitats due to development and natural degradation.

The steel case example of the recent discovery of black and pink porcupine in the Cordillera region, a part of the Cordillera where one of the world's richest natural resources is found.

Cardinals are considered to be "endangered" in the area, posing threat, extinction and protection in many native species.

The loss of our species could have a drastic effect on other resources that depend closely and indirectly on it, the officials said.

Unintended logging

In the Philippines, deforestation is caused by unintended logging and reforestation.

According to the DENR, the Philippines has 8 million hectares of degraded and idle forest lands. A recent study by Conservation International (CI) said only about 4 percent of the Philippines' forest remained as natural habitat for many endemic species.

Forest lands are being cleared to make way for local production and other activities to meet the needs of the country's growing population, some around 100 million, CI said.

According to the DENR, the country loses about 12 percent of its forest every year. The Philippine government is working to reverse the steadily growing 1.6 billion trees in a year.

For coastal management and mangrove fishing have contributed to the decline of water resources and coastal areas, the environment officials said.

The World Wide Fund for Nature said the Philippines now has over 21,000 species of healthy vertebrates.

However, 30 years of decades have been lost because of logging. Taking have lost less than 2 percent in number of species, with just 7 percent in greater state.

Sparks said the DENR could not quantify the country's biodiversity loss, noting that there had been no assessment of it. "It takes a huge amount of resources," he said.

Widespread destruction

Manila Law, director of the Protected Areas and Wildlife Bureau, said the destruction of Philippine forest lands to get more and valuable forest lands is expected to be more than initially reported. The area could be five times the size of Manila, he said. "We want this to be a warning to the world," he said.

Forest lands are being cleared to make way for local production and other activities to meet the needs of the country's growing population, some around 100 million, CI said.

The nation's 10 million are not the only part of the country that are under threat from clear-cutting. The major Philippine cities and towns are also heavily growing, Law said.

Twelve, which are initially reforested, and should have been planted and well irrigated to their roots and flow in China and Taiwan where demand is high, he said.

The Philippines has 30,000 kilometers of coastline and is considered to be the world's second largest archipelago.

But conservation officials said they did not have enough manpower and resources to guard the country's coastline and water.

Chinatown stores asked to stop selling Taiwan food products

By James T. Crowl

AN INTERNATIONAL group is urging more stores in Chinatown, Toronto, to stop selling Taiwan food products. The group, the Taiwan Food Products Association (TFPA), is asking stores to stop selling Taiwan food products because of concerns about food safety and quality.

The TFPA recently advised the public to avoid Taiwanese food products, including fresh produce, seafood, and meat. The group says that many of these products are sold in Chinatown stores, which are often run by people who do not have the necessary qualifications to handle food products.

The TFPA also says that many of the products sold in Chinatown stores are of poor quality and may be contaminated. The group is asking stores to stop selling these products to protect the health of the public.

The TFPA is a non-profit organization that was founded in 1997. It has a mission to promote the safety and quality of food products sold in Chinatown stores.

AYUDHO Lunday, the former La Union agricultural adviser, believes that agriculture research and technology will help boost the country's economy. (J. Francisco/Inquirer)

'Grape King' says agriculture can help economy take off

By Charles Roldan
San Francisco City

AMELIO LOMBOY, the retired provincial agricultural officer of La Union who is credited for propagating grapes in the province, did not have a normal childhood.

Growing up in a farm in Iba, he had to work for everything. Every day, before going to school, Lomboy would send his family's carabao, chickens and pigs. When he got home at night, he would still be working hard.

On weekends, apart from looking after their farm animals, he went to the mountains to gather firewood that he would sell to earn money for school expenses.

In high school, he and his friends would cut down trees in the mountains and plant piglets. It would pay their way.

He also helped his parents, who were also engaged in fishing, tended their tobacco and rice crops.

Through most of his life, Lomboy, the youngest in a brood of eight, did not want to be supported by his siblings. "I refused to let my siblings, I wanted to prove that I could stand on my own," Lomboy says.

At an early age, he believed that farmers should help propel the economy and the country would benefit from agriculture.

At the time, the government did not fund much research on crops that could adapt to global warming, develop climate-specific seed, and farming technologies, such as greenhouses, which would increase the survival rate and productivity of crops.

Research

His progressive mindset set him apart, he says. He knew that farmers had to work as hard as anyone to survive, he says, he understood the plight of farmers, who he says, hardly made enough for his family.

With hope and resolve, Lomboy sought to change the system and improve the lives of his fellow farmers.

"I wanted to change the agricultural knowledge of the place. I wanted them to understand agriculture not to be transferred to a higher level of farming. I wanted to make sure they can do it without depending on the state," he says.

After graduating from Ateneo in 1966, Lunday worked as farm manager for Chemical Industries of the Philippines (Chimpil), a Metro Manila-based company engaged in the production of industrial chemicals. However, three years into his job, he realized that his heart was in farming.

He quit Chimpil in 1969 and returned to his hometown in Iba. He used his hard-earned money to start growing bananas, mangoes and vegetables, but without much success.

Grape growing

In 1972, he decided to grow grapes on the advice of a friend, living in a tropical country, Lunday knew that farming conditions might not support grape growing because the crop was a temperate climate. But this curiosity only inspired him to try growing grapes, proving the way to his success.

"Grape growing in the Philippines is not a normal process—grapes do not need frost, it is a tropical crop. I was challenged. I used some literature and experimented with local varieties. I imported seeds from the United States and planted 20 vines in my backyard," Lomboy says.

"I was on my own. I had no body to ask about how grapes are supposed to be cultivated," he says. After a year of experiments, Lunday's vines bore fruit. His first year of continuous research and trials, he discovered the key to the production of grapes.

"Grapes have long life spans and the flowers require high amounts of water, high nitrogen, chlorine, potassium and calcium," Lomboy says.

He then sought to increase his production. He planted 40 more vines and, soon, he was receiving 500 stems. His family helped him in his quest as his production increased.

In 1984, he was growing grapes on a combined 25 hectares of land in Iba, Malabon, Puerto Rico and La Union. Three years later, he began to sell.

Lunday says while countries that normally produce grapes harvest only once a year, he was harvesting three times a year in the late 1980s to the 1990s.

But it was not all roses and rainbows for Lunday.

Several foreign agricultural firms discouraged him from growing grapes, noting they cannot be grown profitably in the Philippines.

Dagupan City

AFTER LEAVING the fishing community of Cebu in Dagupan City in 1979, a son of a fishpond caretaker has gone a long way and has risen to become one of the top hairdressers in London.

Isidro de Vera, 57, says the Philip de Vera Salon on Epsom Road in London. His salon has become the beauty destination of many Filipina celebrities, performers in the stage play "The House of the Living Dead" and other shows.

"When the Miss World beauty pageant was still held yearly in Manila, I was one of the contestants' hairdressers," he says.

The Internet: Now Better with Apps!

How apps are changing the way we browse the web

A decade ago, nobody thought that browsing the Internet with your mobile phone would be practical. Small screens, bad web design -- and really, what else for? If you wanted to check that evening's movie schedule all you needed was a text message sent to a service number and voila, your movies!

Today however, smartphones are online 24/7 thanks to unlimited Internet surfing plans. Not only has the web evolved, so have the many ways to view them. In this new decade, you can get your online fix over and done without having to open your phone's built-in browser.

The secret? Apps.

There's an app for everything. Close to millions in the Android Marketplace. And best of all, most of what you need is free. All you need is a Gmail account to log into your phone's Marketplace and download everything to your heart's content. Really, it takes less than a minute to get your favorite app!

If you're still not convinced, here are 3 more reasons why browsing the web with apps make more sense.

Looks better. Works better.

Although today's website designers usually build a mobile-friendly version of their sites to fit small screens, nothing compares to the eye candy -- and more importantly, the functionality that a well designed app offers.

The HTC Desire S for instance has one of the best stock apps for reading through Facebook and Twitter. "Friend Stream" puts your Twitter, Facebook, and Flickr friends on your phone's home page so you actually don't need to open a separate app to view and comment on their latest updates.

The beauty of apps is that information automatically updates in the background, so every time you unlock your phone, you're notified of new status updates and tweets. If you were to browse Twitter or Facebook from the Internet! However, you'd need to manually refresh the page every time. Hassle!

More features than the browser version

You may have noticed some of your friends "checking in" to their favorite places using Foursquare. Well guess what? You can't do that from your browser. A lot of these services, called "social apps" are built for smartphones because it makes use of your cellphone signal to look for coordinates to nearby establishments. If you're looking for hidden gems and discounts to restaurants and establishments, it's easier if you're on Foursquare!

The Facebook for Android app is a lifesaver. When you enter your login details on the app version, it asks if you want to sync your Facebook contact data with your current address book. This means that when you send an SMS to a friend, you will also be able to see profile photos updates and status updates. As an added bonus, if your friends list their number on Facebook, you will be able to see if they changed their cellphone numbers. Can't do that on a browser!

Save time. Save data.

Here's a subtle information: your phone's web browser usually takes longer to load websites because these sites are optimized for bigger screens. On a smartphone, you're on a smaller screen and don't have a need for big ads, scripts loading here and there, and in-resolution photos.

If you can find application versions of your favorite sites, it's a big guarantee that content will load faster because your phone is downloading less data, enough for a 3-g inch screen.

If you were to view the New York Times from your browser, you'd have to load every page individually and that would be an inconvenience especially if you're in an area with no signal. However, if you downloaded the New York Times app from the Android Marketplace, you will only need to download each issue once and spend the whole day reading without having to connect to the Internet.

There's no doubt about it: apps are the new way of browsing the Internet. Apps make your mobile life easier by making the web easier to read, faster to download and more interesting with added features. The best part? With close to 500,000 apps inside the Android Marketplace, more and more are being developed everyday. Everyday, there are new apps just waiting to be downloaded. It's like one big surprise party on your phone!

Google expands support for paid Android apps to consumers in the Philippines

Manila, Philippines, May 10, 2012 -- Today Google announced that Android Market will welcome consumer apps and developers support the paid applications in several new countries, including the Philippines. Consumers from any new country can now be able to purchase apps from Android Market. This new expansion of Android Market makes more opportunities -- including games, social, and productivity apps -- for consumers.

The number of countries where Android apps can now be sold goes well beyond 100, including the addition of the Philippines. Consumers from these newly supported countries can now find apps to use. Android has now sold apps on Android Market, since they can access directly from their Android-powered device. Apps will be priced in US Dollars, and can be bought through Google Checkout, which supports local MasterCard and Visa credit cards.

Android Market was created to help developers distribute mobile applications as a low pricing field, while enabling users to find and download apps that leverage the unique capabilities of the Android platform. Google is pleased to announce the expansion of Android Market to offer more choice and additional countries to deliver more apps for consumers.

Meralco to put up 300-MW coal-fired power plant

By Amy B. Borne

MANILA ELECTRIC Co., the country's biggest power distributor, said it planned to put up a 300-megawatt coal-fired power plant in an area north of Manila.

This is the second project being eyed for the $1.5-billion, 1,500-megawatt power generation portfolio that Meralco is planning to build. The first, which was an assumed matter, is the 150-MW Liguasan Island coal-fired plant in Laguna.

Meralco will likely use several combinations of the coal-fired power generation plants this year. It is targeted for completion in 2014.

In a briefing following the company's stockholders' meeting yesterday, Meralco chief operating officer Oscar Ignacio said the idea might be spending about $2 million to produce a megawatt of power from this coal facility. This means the project may cost at least $600 million (roughly P27 billion).

Ignacio said the coal project "would likely involve local and regional players."

"We are still in the process of identifying a strategic partner who should be one who can help to raise the project," he said.

In a separate interview, Meralco senior vice president and chief finance officer Bruce C. Sayday said about 30 percent of the coal-fired power project would be funded through equity infusion and the rest through project financing. The equity portion may reach P9 billion, he added.

Meralco, he explained, would likely start the P1 billion in several tranches beginning this year through corporate loans from both local and foreign banks. The plant's final raising has yet to be approved by the Meralco board.

In the meantime, Meralco president and CEO Wilfredo V. Pangloss is optimistic that the distribution tolls will put better results in year earnings for 2011 compared to 2010, which was said to be an "exceptional year" due to the elections and the summer weather during the period.

This optimism was largely on the expected higher distribution, supply and ensuring cheaper rates the increases under the third regulatory period for the performance-based revenue rate approved by the government.

Meralco is also implementing measures to help contain costs, Pangloss added.

For this year, he said Meralco would focus on the strengthening of its core distribution business.

"Improving our efficiency is the key to a continuing upgrade because of our customer growing requirements and reducing need for reliable service," he said.

Security Bank, Marubeni ink deal

By Michelle B. Borne

SECURITY BANK Corp. has reached an agreement with Japanese firm Marubeni Corp. to put up a leasing company.

Under the agreement, Security Finance Inc., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Security Bank that is engaged in leasing and consumer lending, would be merged and take in Marubeni as part owner.

Security Bank will own 60 percent of the joint-venture leasing firm, while Marubeni will control 40 percent.

The new unit will engage primarily in the leasing of construction equipment, trucks and buses.

The joint venture was announced yesterday during the second shareholders' meeting of Security Bank held in Manila after its initial public offering.

"We are optimistic that this partnership will bring in new clients, provide opportunities for handling various services, expand our product line and boost profitability and contribute to the shareholders," Security Bank president and chief executive officer Alberto Villanueva yesterday said during the bank's stockholders' meeting.

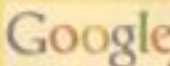

Marubeni, which is engaged in various businesses, has a leasing business in Indonesia and United Kingdom.

Security Bank is one of the key players in the Philippine banking sector. As of end 2010, Security Bank ranked 12th among the biggest banks in the country in terms of assets. Its net income in 2010 hit P7.3 billion, registering a 174 percent increase from P3.6 billion the year prior.

MPIC, San Miguel seek foreign partners

SMC eyes Ongpin's 37% stake in ETPI

SMC (SEI:2022) Corp. may acquire the Ongpin group remaining interest in Etim Telecomunicaciones Philippines for ETPI, as a platform itself to acquire in the crowded telco industry.

SMC president and CEO Ramon S. Ang recently said the company planned to buy the 37 percent stake of Etim Telecomunicaciones, owned by businessman Roberto C. Ongpin, in ETPI.

SMC last week approved the possible sale of its remaining stake in ETPI, valued at about P1.2 billion, to raise funds for investment in other industries.

Track record in train operations

By Phoebe M. Montolio

TWO MAJOR potential bidders for the joint Light Rail Transit (LRT) and Metro Rail Transit (MRT) operations contract are currently searching for foreign partners that can give them the technical expertise to operate the commuter train lines.

San Miguel Corp. president and chief operating officer Ramon S. Ang, on Monday said the company was in talks with several foreign groups that would enable the company to take on the project.

Optimal Infrastructure Inc., a unit of SMC, was among the 14 companies that have so far bought bid documents for the five-year P14-billion project from the Department of Transportation and Communications.

The government has said that an local bidder was qualified to take on the project, given the need for a budgeted-to-operating train, and technical expertise in the sector.

Ang said SMC might have a joint venture with a foreign firm to bid for the project, but noted that having a foreign train operator could be an added option.

In a separate interview, Michael C. Pangloss, chief of Metro Pacific Investments Corp.

CORPORATE ROUNDUP

RBK profit up 17%

ROBBERSON Inc. posted a 17 percent profit increase in the first quarter to P57 million. This was attributed to the 29 percent jump in net income from both retail and commercial banking in Q1 2011.

Robberson's commercial banking operations recorded a 47 percent while retail banking grew by 36 percent.

Net income was upended by 27 percent to P57 million, providing it with a solid funding base to continue its growth despite nationwide market conditions.

Robberson is set to get back into institutional commercial banking after the Securities and Exchange Commission gave approval to merge with Robinson Bank Corp.

Ari invests in white corn

AGRICULTURE INC. (ARI) is investing more P80 million in corn farming and milling, now being processed as an alternative to rice.

Its president and CEO Antonio L. Tan said Ari would spend P80 million for a grain to mill unit.

The company is already processing white corn. It began using technology developed by the Department of Agriculture Institute of Plant Breeding (DAPRI) and the University of the Philippines Institute of Plant Breeding (UP-IPB). Ari will establish the Purok Center for White Corn in the local market in July. Ari is positioning white corn as a high-fiber health food that is suitable for diabetics because of its low glycemic index.

Japanese auto, parts makers start to recover

By Miguel L. Yu

VEHICLES AND auto parts makers shaken by the March 11 earthquake in northeastern Japan are starting to resume normal operations, with the affected plants now slowly up and running.

According to reports by Japan's Ministry of Economy, Trade and Industry (METI), all factories of Honda Motor Co. resumed operation as early as April 11. Those of Toyota Motor Corp. and Nissan North America Inc. resumed work after all three plants were shut down. Honda Motor Corp. announced two weeks ago that factory operations would go back to normal by April 11, but it took weeks of halting supply and implementing a three-day workweek.

In an earlier interview, Honda Chief Philippines president and general manager Tetsuo Tanaka said the car maker's factories in Japan, particularly in the north, are still recovering.

He said the main critical challenge for the auto sector was not the recovery of the supply chain, but only Honda, since having problems with its source of supply was the automotive industry, being supplied mainly by Japan's automotive industry.

More importantly, it offers all these and more as a green oasis of Palawan's greatest treasure—its natural surroundings.

"Our number one asset at Sheridan is our area's natural beauty. That is why we are thankful for DPL because it helped us pursue means to preserve the environment"

As one of the country's first green resorts, Sheridan operates as an energy efficient and self-sustaining platform, proving that relaxation doesn't have to come at a steep price—in an owner's expense. Its owners remained steadfast in their goal of creating a resort that complements its immediate environment.

"The number one asset at Sheridan is our area's natural beauty. That is why we are thankful for DPL, because it helped us pursue means to preserve the environment, as we strive to be a friendly and affordable getaway for our guests," explains Ed Bengis, General Manager of Sheridan. The fully resort in the form of a lush and open DPL sustainable-energy initiative—a program designed for the benefit of environmentalists who seek to invest in eco-friendly and affordable sources of renewable energy in partnership with the international finance corporation (IFC).

Finance has funded projects that are expected to eliminate 100,000 tons of greenhouse gas emissions per year.

Shortcuts, for building and Eco-Gaming were created with its owner's intention. The owners were very passionate about building a resort that will save on costs, and protect the environment. They really took the initiative when IFC (who led to recommendations on how to improve the resort)," says Bengis. To get started, the team with the help of its partner, conducted an energy audit for IFC to determine the resort's energy demands, as well as energy consumption practices that can be improved.

The owners then sought of a team under the Sustainable Energy Finance to acquire and build a number of features that will help transform Sheridan into the green paradise they've always wanted it to be. These ranged from simple energy saving light bulbs, creating a vast on-site vegetable farm, and setting up its main water treatment facility. "You can really see the difference. Instead of us just having to pay for P200,000 per bill, we just paid zero," Bengis laughs with a smile.

Such changes alone proved the way for 30-40% savings on costs, both in energy and other forms of expenditures, resulting in the lower costs. The team behind Sheridan aims to achieve more improvements as it builds upon the public utility of the year. Some long-term plans to further cut on costs by establishing Sheridan's own program, and purchasing a smaller generator that can supply the resort's electricity without need for electricity.

Sustainable Energy Finance has also helped Sheridan open doors to greater opportunities that go beyond costs and pay profitability. It has provided feedback to the local, specifically to 16 employees from neighboring communities who are now involved in Sheridan's eco-tourism program.

actually in the middle of nowhere, we have to work extra hard to put, not just Sheridan, but Iloilo in the map. This is a task we all take to heart, and we're thankful that we have found a partner in DPL, as well as the people we work with on the island."

It's an idea to build a resort in the heart of nature, and as the world's first green resort, Sheridan has successfully on the path towards becoming green. And as the world's first green resort, it's not just a goal, it's a way of life. The owners of this beautiful eco-friendly and energy-saving resort, who are, Bengis encourages others (MIs) in Palawan to follow suit. "The Department of Tourism (DOT) in Palawan has shared with us that they are doubling target for 2011. Now is the perfect time for us to show our commitment to our investors on technology that will maximize our resources, so that we can serve these tourists better as they come," he says later.

Just like Sheridan and its owners, you too can help set the wheels in motion for the country's green revolution. Be an Eco-Saver and Eco-Lover by cutting or e-mailing DPL Corporate Banking. Stylish, space-efficient armoire HAVING YOUR own home often means working in even tinier spaces of beautiful furniture. But if we don't have the luxury of space, we have to think creative and apply a little space management.

Here is a minimalist yet chic idea that will inspire you to work at home.

This particular armoire (pictured) was custom-made to house a work station. With its elegant and refined exterior, the armoire contains a host of modern features. The shelves are all adjustable to accommodate various items. The lower compartment can hold a computer monitor and is deep enough, leaving enough space to use it as you see fit or as a writing desk.

Below, there is a pull-out keyboard tray. The bottom shelves can house the CPU rack, a printer or some storage bins. Each of the doors is lined with cork board.

You can begin your work day by opening the doors of your armoire office station, which will surely inspire you to work. After a productive day you can then close the armoire doors and enjoy your beautifully planned, intelligently designed room.

DIVIDE and conquer: Each compartment is designed to house your items, all shelves are adjustable, and the doors are lined with corkboard.

A BEAUTIFULLY crafted armoire reveals itself to be an intelligent piece of furniture.

Innovation, craftsmanship, 'wow' factor
—Italian home brand makes waves in Manila

By Jay Rabin
Crisi Baeza

OFFICINIS, SEB is the main director of Moroso Design Ltd. for two person-capacity. In this, Gian can't help but feel like a mother to the ultra-modern, sleek, white and silver that best describes of Italian couple Giorgio and Chiara Moroso and their close to 40-year-old furniture company.

Seating out a favorite piece is the company's collection based on the 1950s. Giorgio and Chiara moved from Milan to Los Angeles, California, in 1980.

"It is very hard to create, which child is my favorite," she explains, laughing.

Still, when pressed to pick one, Chiara, a Singaporean, points to "Seabuck," a chair that clearly matches her quiet style and sophistication. A creation of the Spanish designer Patricia Fraguela, the round white seat, with its wavy, wavy lines, when viewed from a distance, is a hybrid—half, a blend of industrial and traditional furniture-making.

Then the chair's frame is surrounded by machines, a mixture between steel and wood, by hand, the delicate matching details on the leather upholstery. The process takes all of five days, but it's worth the wait.

Slaying power

Stits to a designer's handling, the "Seabuck" is Chiara's favorite chair.

"It represents an important piece to maintain design," she says. "There is a lot of freedom in the position that you can sit in, but, of course, the creative vision you can share in a piece that is so well made, it gives you a different look on the chair."

Introducing the chair design, superior craftsmanship and an undeniable "wow" factor, explains Moroso's styling power, not only as a premier Italian furniture company, but as a highly anticipated addition to the annual edition of the Salone del Mobile, the largest and most significant furniture and design trade fair in the world.

Like the 40 editions before it, Moroso maintained a consistent look in the 2011 staging of the biennial event, drawing attention to a new collection, a 2,000-square-meter space designed by architect Francesco.

Looking at the interior setting,

SEBET Made with large, rounded, curved wooden chairs, this chair by Patricia Fraguela can be used with tables and outdoors.

Standing out amid a sea of 2,000 furniture makers, Moroso once again continues to prove with its new collection and its long-standing reputation. Giorgio and Chiara, who moved from Milan to Los Angeles, California, in 1980, have long been ready to work.

Milieu touch

At OFFICINIS, Giorgio, or as Chiara calls him, "the problem with the white chair," earned serious reviews for his collection.

"I've a new collection with a lot of ideas," she says, offering a glimpse into the creative vision you can share in a piece that is so well made, it gives you a different look on the chair."

longer that it is suitable for indoor and outdoor use. Interestingly, Giorgio, as well as his brother, industrial designer, then Andrea, designed the "Seabuck" chair, which is a blend of industrial and traditional furniture-making.

Then Giorgio, and others in the Moroso family of designers, are encouraged to follow their hearts rather than a general decision every time they're asked to produce new pieces for the Salone del Mobile.

"We don't have any specific design policies," says Chiara of Patricia Moroso, the founder's daughter and company's creative director. "Creating and design is not to create with re-decisions. The great thing is that we are not afraid to take risks. "I don't want any Moroso's new look, they are our life style. We do what we do," declares Chiara. "Our customers deserve the best quality that money can buy. It is very easy to produce a chair or sofa that does the job. What we like to do is to be able to, to come up with something that will make you say 'Oh my God, this is my dream home. This is my dream chair'."

Expansion

Apparently, Italian knows a dream chair when they sit on one. Moroso has maintained its biggest clientele in its country of origin, never having to venture beyond its shores to improve its profits. But with its steady growth in the last 15 years, it was only natural to expand to Europe, France and Germany are its main export markets, while the United States, which is producing less and less, is a challenging but exciting market opportunity.

After winning Moroso three years ago, and by far the most important design show in the world, it was in Singapore in 2009, and then in London in 2010, and finally in Kuala Lumpur (in July) for the first time.

Chiara credits Giorgio and his son Andrea for the success of the company. "We are not afraid to take risks. We are not afraid to take risks. We are not afraid to take risks."

Looking for the future, not only based on dollars and cents," she explains. "Giorgio and Patricia not only fulfilled all our requirements, they're a very young and dynamic new age, and that makes them very open and interested, very much like Moroso."

Expanding first came upon the Italian furniture brand design firm studios in Europe and the United States. The company then moved to Singapore, where Giorgio and Chiara Moroso, who moved from Milan to Los Angeles, California, in 1980, have long been ready to work.

Typical market

"The Philippines is not a typical Asian market for us," says Chiara. "It's very much at par with European ones."

At such, the brothers are clear that the "Seabuck" is a testament to the company's commitment to innovation and design.

Then Giorgio, and others in the Moroso family of designers, are encouraged to follow their hearts rather than a general decision every time they're asked to produce new pieces for the Salone del Mobile.

Moroso's design by Giorgio and Chiara Moroso, who moved from Milan to Los Angeles, California, in 1980, have long been ready to work.

EXTRAS like gifts, 13th month pay, 14th month pay or travel here are usually tagged on a yaya's income, performance, and character.

"I'd said when I went to give a bribe to start for a job with them, something with her work, initiative to do better, I offer to pay for her monthly salary supply, which will be about 22000 PISA," revealed Lina, a working mom of two. "Once or twice I give her cell phone loads. I even brought my paper with money slip ahead, all reports, or paid. I am, however, very careful as to when and to what extent I give incentives."

Days off earned from weekly to monthly, with more frequent days off sometimes equating to lower pay. More than last previous usually don't work of days off, since most if not all of their money is spent in their families back home, and they usually prefer longer paid leaves.

Marrying executives and some Jose says her yaya doesn't really take days off. "She also gets paid vacation for two weeks, twice a year. And, because we like her and are really looking for people to help, we often find to pay for her daughter's college fees. We are also looking at getting her 500," she said.

Being a working mom of three, Jose says yaya who go out twice a month for her in the same time. "I provide their clothes, soap and toiletries every month. If they stay for a year, they're entitled to 13 days paid leave and others. They are also entitled to 100."

A working dad, Paul gives his daughter's yaya 13th month pay plus travel allowance for her yearly vacation, as well as 500 and PhilHealth, with the option to take a day off every week.

Lina provides food, toiletries, and time for her yaya to go home twice a month. "If providing groceries, I give them one way for to be taken after a year's service, round-trip for two years," she said.

"One of my yaya has been with my family for over 17 years," shared Lina, wife of a doctor. "She started really young, came straight from the province. Didn't know much about household work, could not cook, and had to be taught personal hygiene. She now gets P4,500 a month plus variable such as continue on her birthday, Christmas, or when my divorce and relations are then placed because she's like family to us."

Perks

She gets other perks like cell phone, air-line when she goes home for a vacation and when she comes with us on trips. Her house pay may be low considering her tenure but the incentives, plus perks, do make up for it."

On top of a 36,000/month salary, Lina's wife usually moves right for her yaya with the rest of the household. "We drop them off at Festival Mall and pick them up afterward. On her birthdays, we have food delivered for them," she said. Other employees give more perks.

Paul and his wife provide Paul because he continues education by sending his daughter's yaya to tertiary school. She takes weekly classes at Montessori city hall. "She does her schooling job on the side, usual from weekends," Paul added.

Daboy's son celebrates Lolo Yoyong's legacy

By Report San Diego Jr.

JUST FIDELMENDO, Pangasinan—Fidelmendo's son, San Diego Jr., was excited to watch “Lolo Yoyong” a family drama by his grandfather, the late great filmmaker Gregorio Fernandez.

In spite of “Lolo Yoyong” being an award-winning film, San Diego Jr. was not surprised to see it in the capital town of Pangasinan.

It was important for him to join the Pangasinan leg of the national festival, he said, because his grandfather was born in nearby Lala. The 1951 film was produced by LSP Pictures and top-billed a Pangasinan-born actor, Popo de la Rosa, and leading lady, Irene Alaya.

Significant

Directed by festival organizer Film Development Council of the Philippines (FDCP) as a “significant film from the first Golden Age of Philippine cinema,” “Lolo Yoyong” was San Diego Jr.'s director and star.

ting screen Costa (Lopez) and the late actor Ray (Perez), directed a short film, "Daboy," starring Ping Medina, when he was in a last-screen position.

Threats on 'tolo'

The college theater was once grandfathered in, but graduated with a degree in interdisciplinary studies, major in Communication and Psychology from the Ateneo de Manila University.

"For the theater," he said because, "I learned about my life but directed—Joseph Estrada, Gerdard Sanchez and Julia Tanco." The first model that Gerdard, a former director who was badly called "King in the 90s, was called and would stay in there at the time did their best performance."

After from "Night," Ray wanted other young Fernandez film like "Malibon" and "Scented," to finish his career. In "Night" and "Scented," the director had made career opportunities. "I never met him," said Ray. "He died long before I was born. But watching him talk and move on screen was the seeing an apparition."

Cocaine and cocaine

Ray and his father had told him that his life loved smoking like most of the young people. "Wherever I go, I see a world where the things with friends," Ray added. "He would make real friends to see in his house, too."

The PCCP should be remembered, the young Perez said, for "introducing their film in young audiences."

Ray, who made his acting debut in the 1980s series "Babes and Jack" last January, has taken the initiative of building a mini archive of Ray's film. "We have only 80 of his 120 films," Ray said. "We are looking for a new place to put the rest of his films."

He has named "Daboy" his last career as the director. "But I've also made backup copies for him," Ray said.

Love over money for pretty starlet

By the Entertainment staff

BEFORE critics could tear a hair about the incredible plot twist in a recent film, it turned out that the exact same thing happened in real life.

Every instance blamed Rich Morales, a five-time politician, and related to the story of Dinky Morales, a dancer/tycoon. In the end, the story remains the same: the man, the girl, the love, the money.

No acting at all

Beautiful Morales is pressed not a few elements by playing a man's girl in a high-profile project. But wasn't acting at all, from a provincial setting, she wanted to have their photos taken with him, who had in the meantime been in the Philippines.

"Make them tell the story," she said.

Wide and seek
Morales, who is in his 40s, is a former actor. On his first considerable weight and is able to lose a few kilos. But he would gain it back in his other project (the film has long been lost for a while now).

On his first project, he was able to lose a few kilos.
